Parmigiana Alla Calabrese (Calabrian Eggplant Parm) - In Person - New!

This famous eggplant casserole is made throughout Italy, but the Calabrian version is particularly rich and delicious. Depending on the region, parmigiana is usually prepared with layers of fried or grilled slices of eggplant topped with basil-flavored tomato sauce and local cheese. This recipe is additionally enriched with boiled eggs and salsiccia calabrese, the tasty Calabrian sausage flavored with fennel seeds.

Parmigiana alla calabrese is usually prepared with provolone, mozzarella, and grated pecorino. The final touch is hidden in the tomato sauce, prepared with olive oil, tomatoes, and the most 'appreciated' Italian onions--the famous Calabrian cipolla di Tropea. Instructor: Tony Penezic.

Puerto Rican Pastelón - In Person - New!

This plantain-based casserole is a staple in Puerto Rican and Dominican cuisine. Also known as "Puerto Rican Lasagna". It consists of sliced (typical for Puerto Rico) or mashed plantains that are layered with minced meat. The meat used in the dish is usually the Puerto Rican version of picadillo—a hearty stew prepared with a combination of ground meat and tomato sauce, while the common additions often include shredded cheese or green beans. The result is a delicious blend of flavors and textures. Unlike lasagna, Pastelón is both sweet and savory (*the riper the plantains, the sweeter the dish will be).

Pastelón can be enjoyed as the main course or a filling side dish. It also goes under the name piñon. Instructor: Tony Penezic.

Greek Moussaka - In Person - New!

Moussaka is one of the best-known Greek dishes, a baked casserole consisting of ground lamb meat and layers of sliced eggplant, covered with a thick layer of bechamel sauce that gets golden and crusty as it bakes. The lamb is sometimes replaced with beef, while the eggplants might be replaced with zucchini or potatoes. An 'exotic' version of lasagna, without the pasta, moussaka is a healthier version due to the abundance of vegetables used in the dish.
